WILSON LEAGUE OF NATIONS FADES

A particular case in point with regard to Wilson's League of Nations, the copyright of which Governor Cox has taken over from President Wilson, is the latest meeting of the League Council at San Sebastian, Spain. It is interesting to note, by the way, that the League has become a moving feast. It flitters ghost-like about Europe, like the disconsolate Wanderer of Eugene Sue's novel, pitching its tent, disclosing its wares, lingering for a day, and then moving onward, ever onward into the night.

July 29 the council of the league of nations met at San Sebastian. It was an hour of dire peril for the whole world. A crisis had been reached in the war between Russia and Poland, and there was an even chance that all Europe would be engulfed in another bloody struggle, with the issue at last joined between Bolshevism and Western civilization. Of specific moment is the fact that there were not lacking Wilsonian urgings in the United States that this government owed an obligation to Poland which we could not ignore, despite the fact that we had declined to enter the league of nations. It was a time of all times when the covenant ought to have functioned for the maintenance of peace.

In this situation the council of the league of nations met in San Sebastian as far removed from the theatre of war-like activities as it was possible to get—and took up the discussion of what?

"Making traveling easier in Europe?"

The quotation is from the Associated Press report of the proceedings of the meeting, which said in a cable dispatch from San Sebastian dated July 30:

"The opening session of the council of the league of nations began this afternoon. The programme contained but practical questions, such as making traveling easier in Europe."

And another world war threatened!

As it happened, the supreme council of the allied powers took hold of the situation, and the crisis was safely ridden for the time being.

The incident aptly illustrates the futility of the hopes which were rashly built upon the potency of the league of nations in maintaining the peace, and at the same time affords fresh proof that in a time of national emergency, the practical statesmen of the nations directly concerned, league or no league, will assume control of a situation in which their national prestige and safety are at stake. Well enough to leave to the league of nations such practical questions as "making traveling easier in Europe," if, indeed, the tourists agencies are not able to cope with this international problem; but where war threatens, or national prestige are involved, the spirit of nationality predominates.

Suppose a hostile Mexican government should grant coaling station privileges to a commercial rival of the United States, as it might well attempt, would Governor Cox have the council of the league of nations invoked to consider that violation of the Monroe Doctrine, after it had disposed of the problem of "making traveling easier in Europe," or would we have the United States settle the matter itself?

It may be pointed out that if the United States had accepted the covenant, the nations could have presented a united front. Is it possible to imagine the supreme council abdicating its rights in the emergency which was confronted—Lloyd George and Millerand, for instance, merging their controlling voices in the league council in so great a crisis?

These entente statesmen knew of the impending meeting of the league council—their nations have signed the covenant. They know the purposes for which the league was designed—to cope with just such a situation as was presented. And the league council was not even invited to take part in the conference over the Russo-Polish impasse; or even to give it any discussion as a separate body. The membership of the United States in the league would not have altered conditions—so far as Europe was concerned, save to embroil the nation in any determination which the league might reach, with the United States possessing one vote.

And do we want to go to war with Bolshevik Russia just now? Having had the Russian problem, among others, before it for almost two years, the administration is still groping about for a policy.

Will Governor Cox, advocate of the league, voluntarily assuming the policies of Mr. Wilson, say that as a member of a league of nations he would have this nation's vote cast for war with Russia, or would subject the United States, by participation in the league's affairs, to enforce entrance upon such a war?

After all, Europe knows just where the United States stands. We have proven our right to be trusted to take the just stand, and do our national duty, in any international emergency that may arise. Membership in a league of nations would not add a jot to that obligation; to do any less, whether or not we were a member of a league, would be repugnant to our tried national spirit, and unthinkable.

For the rest, we may proudly point to Warren G. Harding as the successor of Woodrow Wilson, in whose hands these matters will rest after March 4 next. His character, record and public addresses, combined with his deep love of country and his devotion to its best interests, is a broad humanity, which gives sufficient assurance that under his administration the United States will not fall short of discharging its full obligations to all mankind. Devotion to the traditions and ideals of America is the most satisfactory covenant, after all, of lasting and honorable peace throughout the world.

THE AERIAL MAIL SERVICE

When the mail-carrying airplane which started from New York to San Francisco arrived at the Pacific Coast city yesterday, it marked a new epoch in fast mail delivery between the Atlantic and the Pacific. The difference in time between the airplane's flight and the running time of the fast mail trains across the continent is approximately 44 hours, and it is stated that an effort will be made to inaugurate a regular service by air, starting a plane from each of the terminal cities once a day.

The airplane mail service has been used extensively in the east between New York and Washington, and New York and Cleveland and has proven a marked success, and it is planned to extend the service so as to include all the large cities of the United States.

SYRIAN THIEVES IMPEDE TRAVEL

Correspondence of Associated Press

CONSTANTINOPLE, Aug. 15.—Rohrer bands of Chetes, who have for months made travel in Syria unsafe and have held up American relief workers twice within 10 days, are operating under the orders of Turkish nationalists and of the Arab government, according to information received by Dr. R. A. Lambert, director of the Near East relief committee at Aleppo. Dr. Lambert says he has received affidavits to support this charge. He believed it was one of these bands that last February murdered two American Y. M. C. A. secretaries near Antab.

The circumstances which led to these conclusions are described by Near East relief agents as follows:

The first hold-up of Americans occurred in June, when two motor trucks, in charge of John O. Brian, a relief worker, that were carrying 19 Americans were halted between Antab and Kilis.

Though Brian and all American property were not molested, the Armenian men and all of their belongings were taken off before the trucks were allowed to proceed. Only Brian's repeated pleading saved the women from a similar fate. The convoy continued its way to Aleppo after the men were removed. While relief officials were negotiating for the release of the Armenians, the prisoners were hastily set free by orders of the Arab authorities at Aleppo.

Meeting the leader of the bandits in Aleppo later, Brian found him wearing the uniform of an officer of the army of Prince Faisal, who was elected king of Syria. The Chetes expressed to Brian a feeling of friendship for the Americans and the British, but a bitter hatred of the French and Armenians.

A Horrid Threat.

Amateur Gardener (truly)—Look here, sir! That dog of yours comes in here every day and digs up my flower beds, and I want you to put a stop to it!

His Neighbor—Suppose I don't? What then?

"I'll plant so many flowers that your wretched dog will wear himself to a skeleton trying to keep them dug up!"—London Answers.
